

LOSS

Francine L. Trevens

I had not walked these streets in years
Filled they once were with angst and tears
I knew much would now be changed
For place, as life, gets rearranged.
Yet I suffered constant dismay
When naught remained of yesterday
While in mind's photographic eye
The sites—and you—could never die.

“Loss” © 2005 by Francine L. Trevens