

THE END OF DAY

James Feichthaler

The end of day is like the start:
Heaven unfolds its gaudy heart;
A touch of red, a touch of white,
We soon forget there is a night.

The end of life is much like this:
First heaven tempts us with a kiss,
Then conscience must expire the flame
Of consequence, of soul, of name.

“The End of Day” © 2006 by James Feichthaler