

THE MARCH TO LONGXI

Chen Tao (824-882)

Fearlessly they swore to sweep away the Hun.
Brocaded furs lost to Tartar dust in thousands.
All along the River of Doubt, their pitiable bones;
deep in boudoir dreams, still living men.

—Translated by Mark Francis

“The March to Longxi” © 2006 by Mark Francis

Contemporary Rhyme Vol. 3 No. 2 Spring 2006