

TREASURE

William Walden

It's whispered there's a new device
That surreptitiously is sold:
Small, oval, heavy, high in price,
But more than worth its weight in gold.
It has a button which, if pressed,
Improves one's looks and self-esteem,
Wins friends, soothes pain, puts care at rest,
And brings fulfillment of a dream.
I'm keen to buy it, but regret
To say I haven't found one yet.

"Treasure" © 2005 by William Walden